

Brian Etheridge, Assistant Professor of History at Louisiana Tech University, welcomes participants to The United States and Public Diplomacy: Toward an International History, held April 20-21, 2007, at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies.

Participants listen during The United States and Public Diplomacy: Toward an International History conference, held April 20-21, 2007, at the Mershon Center.

Nicholas Cull, University of Southern California, critiques “Searching for the Successor Generations: Exchange Programs, Networks of Influence, and U.S. Foreign Policy in the 1980s” by Giles Scott-Smith (center), Roosevelt Study Center, as Neal Rosendorf (left), Long Island University, looks on at The United States and Public Diplomacy: Toward an International History conference, held April 20-21, 2007, at the Mershon Center.

Adam Howard of the U.S. Department of State presents “New Directions for the Foreign Relations of the United States Series: Documenting the History of Official Cultural Diplomacy” at The United States and Public Diplomacy: Toward an International History conference, held April 20-21, 2007, at the Mershon Center.